Innovative Origins, Sustainable Future

Cahokia Rice was developed at Louisiana State University (LSU) using traditional breeding with no foreign genes or DNA inserted. The resulting non-GMO, high-protein rice is now exclusively grown in Southern Illinois.

Each growing season, the crop is rotated among the fields to increase soil fertility and support sustainability. The rice crop is harvested at just the right time each year to maximize quality and protein content. Fields are managed to provide a habitat for migratory waterfowl, which in turn support field sustainability and natural soil fertilization.
